Driscoll in the Fight Near the Broadway Flower Stand-Detectives Are on His Trail, but Even if He Is Caught He Cannot Be Charged with Murder.

STRUCK THOMAS DUNN,

Detectives Oates and Nugent, of the Old sltp station, and Carr and Clark, of the Fourth Precinct, are to-day working diligently, but with lit-tle hope of success, to find some cine to the ideatity of the man who struck down Thomas Dunn at the corner of Broadway and Fulton street Sunday the curbstone, and died at his residence, 6s Broadway, yesterday morning. He will be buried in Calvary Cametery, from the Mission Church on State street, at 10, 10 to-morrow morning. The police are in something of a quandary as to what charge they can make against the man who struck Dunn, even if they do find him. No one believes that he meant to seriously injure the

The men who were with Duan do not think he did. The best thing he can do will be to come for ward now and give himself up.

The first provocation, it is admitted, came from the quartet of which Duan was one. Driscoli was purchasing boutoniers for his friends and himself from Lens, the flower girl, who has sold them for years in front of Knoz's hat store.

She knew the young men well. They were among her best customers. They chaffed her and ahe answered perity while pinning the first bouquet on Driscoli's coat. Then the strangers came up and seemed impalient at being delayed.

"Hurry up; we want to get a train for Phindelphis," and one.

"You walt," said Driscoll, good-naturedly.

"Not much," returned the other, throwing a half-dollar down on the glass case with the request, "two buttomboles, please."

Driscoli picked up the pleese of airer and said:

"Well, we will charge you 20 conis apnece for them for your harry, and you keep the change, Lens."

"You're too blanked smart," said the man, as him.

Driscoll stood still, with his back turned to the party.

The strangers were hurrying away, when Dunn gave a peculiar, irritating laugh. The strangers returned, and the man who bought the flowers hit

The four young men then attacked the strangers, and during the scuffle Dunn was thocked down.

The strangers were getting the worst of it and fied, when policeman Collins collared the man who knocked Dunn down.

He brought him back, but Dunn positively refused to make a complaint, and as Collins had not seen the assault committed, he allowed the man to go free.

During the melee one of the strangers exchanged hats with Driscoll, and this is absolutely the only clue which the police have to assist them in their search.

one which the police have to assist them in their search.

Officer Collins, who arrested Dunn's assailant and then let him go, was before Supt. Murray to-day. He said he saw the man running and caught him. The man told him he was in a hurry to esteh a boat for the Palnadelphia train.

He took the man to where Dunn and his riends were and found Policeman heoguade, of the Oak atreet station, on the case. Supt. Murray directed charges to be made against both Collins and MoQuade.

THEY JUST REVEL IN COFFEE. ALL JAY STREET ENJOYS THE SMELL OF

BURNT BEANS. Yet Mr. Akers Is Arrested on the Groun to Be Haled to the Bar of General Ses sions-The Neighbors Say the Smell Is Realthful and Fragrant. The case of Frederic Akers, of the Atlas Coffee Mills, 16 Jay street, indicted for maintaining public auteance with the smell of his roast coffee to be argued next Friday before Judge Martin in the Court of General Sessions.

The Board of Health made the complaint, and The Board of He-lin made the complaint, and Lawyer Siakemap, for Mr. Akers, filed a demurrer, in which he said that everything had been done to carry off the smell of the coffee, and that physicians who had been subpensed would testify that the smell of coffee was not unnealiny. An Evering Wond, reporter went to the neighborhood this morning to investigate the matter a little. There is undoubtedly a smell of coffee there, but from interviews with all the residents in the quarter nobody was found who objected to it.

Almost across from the alleged malodorous Atlas is the quarter nobody was found who objected to it.

Almost across from the alleged malodorous Atlas Mills is a brick nones, in front of whose basement is the sign of "M. McCormack, Tailor." The reporter interviewed the said McCormack and his wise on the smell of coffee.

"I never heard any complaints about it," said the plump little tailor, as he sewed away at the velvet collar of a coat. "If that were the only thing, or the worst, in the way of smell, we'd naver complain. Ilke coffee smell myself."

"So do I, "said Mrs. McCormack. "It must be some crank that wants to make a fus. We can smell it, of course, when the wind blows this way, but nobody can mind that, It's splenuid."

Across the way is the California House. The bell was rung and the door opened. As it did the pleasing effluvia of the Atlas Mills, which poured like a gulf stream through the small dingy corridor, wrapped the reporter in Oriental fragrance. It was deliciona, almost inebriatingly comforting. Mrs. Helen Schmit, when asked her free, unbiased sense of smell where coffee was concerned, billthely repiled:

"I like it. There is smells enough that's bad from the street to have this a comfort. None of the boarders ever asid a word against it. There are several coffee-mills around, and I don't see why they should complain of this one or of any other." Mrs. James Powers, the chalciane of the Jay Street Hotel, across the street, said she liked the smell of the coffee. A man told her husband last Sunday that somebody hat said that she had heard of somebody who didn't like the smell of rosst coffee, but that was the worst complaint she had ever heard.

Mrs. Jenger, of No. 7, hard by, was surprised at being asked if she objected to the smell of coffee. "I like it, "she said smphatically.

Mrs. Murray, of No. 8, not only liked it but thought it was a healthy smell, which is as much as can be said of ottar of rosse. With this conviction of the hydrele quality of coffee as a perfume man has an be said of ottar of rose. With this conviction of the hydrel
